Ex-Senator Sharon is humming along on his way to Washington to the tune of "the girl I left behind me." Miss Hill has not yet succeeded in getting arry of his good money. This, no doubt, seems hard to her, as she has taken such extraordinary pains to please him and win his devotion and money. By the sworn testimony of the negress in the last piece of litigation, it appears that Miss Hill, in her desperation to infatuate him, procured a love charm of the negress, composed of nine parts of molasses, nine | C. & C. pinches of sugar and a weak solution of black tea, which she fed him by the spoonful three times per day. Resulthe kicked her out of his room. The next charm was a pair of socks with the toes tied together, and soaked in whisky, which she wore around her left knee. Strange to say the senator was not persuaded to the verge of matrimony with the æsthetic idea-very likely he was atraid his nether garments would be appropriated next, and Miss Hill was in despair. Hence the litigation.
